Jill Jones-Evans, Gambacorta Jones-Evans : High Tea At The Victoria Room before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised High Tea At The Victoria Room:

4 of 5 people found the following review helpful. Save your moneyBy Gail Betzell thought that this book would have photos of table settings and surroundings at The Victoria Room. Instead, it is merely a recipe book with mundane recipes that can be found for free on the internet. Some of the ingredients call for pork mince, nigella seeds, lavender oil, lavender flowers, Persian feta, rose syrup, lychees, haloumi cheese, etc. How many of us have this in our pantry or wish to purchase just to experiment with recipes that do not even sound appealing. My copy of High Tea At The Victoria Room will be seen on the shelf at Goodwill.0 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Four StarsBy John W. Only a couple of pages were dedicated to the history and etiquette. All in all this is a recipe book. Nothing too complicated, however some of the ingredients can be pricey. But then again it is for a formal high tea!There are a few recipes I would like to try. The photos are beautiful. High Tea at the Victorian Room covers:* The History of High Tea including etiquette* The Perfect Cup of Tea* The Story of Coffee* Sandwiches* Scones* Cupcakes* Conserves* Cakes, Muffins and Slices* Tarts* Biscuits* Not so Sweet* Cocktails

High Tea is quite simply a ritual of pleasure and elementary decadence. Delicious and fun, High Tea is an afternoon treat that satisfies the most basic desires of the palate whilst providing the perfect excuse for a gathering of friends or family. Today the term 'High Tea' most commonly refers to the aforementioned practice of Afternoon Tea; gatherings where tea is served from mid-afternoon to early evening along with a selection of sweet and savoury finger foods. Fortunately for most, the luxuries that were once exclusively reserved for the upper echelons of society are now available to be enjoyed by one and all. Join us for High Tea at the Victoria Room.
