Matt Kramer : Matt Kramer's New California Wine before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Matt Kramer's New California Wine:

Winegrowing region since the mid-1880s, first California winegrowing area to win a French award (Grand Prize at the Paris Exposition of 1889), AVA since 1982, home to the country's longest continuously family-owned winery and the first varietally-bottled Petite Sirah, source of most the state's Chardonnay clone (which made up a large portion of that famous 1973 Montelena), home of almost 60 wineries and growing every year, etc. How could that be overlooked? 11 of 11 people found the following review helpful. I've read it, I've used it, I drank it (well, not really) By Citizenrobot I have already nipped into this book several times, especially before trips to nearby Santa Barbara wine country, and Kramer has never steered me wrong yet. Based on his recommendations, I experienced some great wines at Foley and Longoria - not really a GUIDE BOOK per se, no fancy graphics or easy to turn to index pages, but Kramer does have his own wine guide for this. I highly recommend for wino-folks living right here on the left coast. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Three Stars By Chris Yaldezian Good book. Solid. By the time I read it, it was not new anymore.

California has become the hottest wine producing area in the world, and it happened in less than 25 years. Now the acclaimed Wine Spectator columnist and critic Matt Kramer traces the dramatic progress of the California winemaking industry; the who, how, why, what, and where. No one is better equipped to provide insight into the ways in which West Coast vintners are working to create extraordinary wines, and to explain the myriad developments in character, quality, and technology that have taken place. Kramer's book provides the first comprehensive look at how new approaches to wine making have contributed to California's current high status in the world order of wine.

About the Author Matt Kramer has been a full-time food and wine writer since 1976. His columns appear in every issue of Wine Spectator and Diversion magazines. He is also the longtime wine critic for The Oregonian and previously a wine columnist for The Los Angeles Times. Kramer is the author of the Making Sense series, which includes Matt Kramer's New California Wine, Making Sense of Burgundy and The classic Making Sense of Wine.
